

Mai Trang Thanh
President
Honeywell Indochina

Mai Trang Thanh is responsible for the development and implementation of Honeywell's comprehensive strategy to accelerate the company's growth in Indochina (Vietnam, Myanmar, Laos and Cambodia), including expansion into new markets and new product offerings. Working with all businesses globally and particularly in the Asia-Pacific region, Mai is in charge of leading "One Honeywell" performance to develop a winning culture in the market of Indochina.

A native of Vietnam, Mai has spent more than 18 years in various positions in the oil and gas industry. She has strong experience in establishing greenfield businesses, fostering government and strategic business relationships, identifying potential markets and business segments, as well as defining and implementing growth initiatives to drive long-term business development. Since joining the company, Thanh has developed significant rapport with many industry and government leaders in key Honeywell sectors.

Prior to joining Honeywell in July 2011, Mai worked for General Electric (GE), where she was the market development manager and then country manager for the company's oil and gas business. Prior to GE, Mai worked for Chevron, where she held a number of senior positions.

Mai holds a Bachelor of Arts degree in Economics from the National Economic University in Vietnam and an MBA from Columbia Southern University in the United States.
